The Death of the President.

President Lincoln died at 7 o'clock this morning at an assassin's hand. Everyone who reads our city sheet supplied to this quickly announcement, the sad details of which will be found in the columns of this paper. Abraham Lincoln, a President of the United States should die at a critical period in the history of our country, is a calamity sufficiently sad. But a President, the chief magistrate, at the dawn of the peace, the acknowledged leader of the ideas of Liberty, Perpetuity, and Human Freedom, whose life is sacrificed to the cruel hand of a malicious assassin, in the vigor of his manhood, at the commencement of his authority, and at a date when great benefits to his by consequence may be hoped, is an affair of such extraordinary magnitude, so heavily weighted with sorrow, so fearfully fraught with the results of the future, that it is hard to realize the fact.

We bow in the will of God. He, who governs, rules, knows best. And, doubtless, God, in His wisdom, has ordained the sad ending of the Nation. Let us humbly submit to His decisions. Our duty is plain; it is to do what lies in our power to bring this people up, and establish them as a power on the earth forever!

If it may pay part of the scheme of the politicians to use the tragedy upon the person of Lincoln, to produce, through his death, a result, which he, if living, would not do, shall we, in our sorrow, be blind to the fact? The North today more closely united than ever. The determination to prosecute the rebellion to a finish, in defiance of the opposition in rebellion in its ranks of the people are strengthened in the best proper to send a message with a open heartedness unknown in the personalities of the past.

We look through the clouds of present overwhelming sorrow, and see in time, a government. The nation is bright and serene. The hand shook over the death of the President, we are confident, will bear monumental to the power, the glory, and the prosperity of our country.

The trial of the People is over.

That Defective Nail Cure.

Post Office, Gregory, Hd., April 30, 1866.

THOS. PORTER, TRAVELLER—On my return to Clarke, Hardin, my attention was called to an article in your paper of the 3d inst., concerning the Rocky Mt. Nail Cure, in the delivery of which, I, as the agent, was the bearer of the C. O. D. Pkg. and the brunt of the blame has fallen. The mistake was made by my not at once opening the package, and in ignorance of the Advertised Super at such a distance, I, with your permission, will do so forthwith.

Upon my pointing the defective remedy out to me in Mr. Hardin's office, promptly promised to return the package to be made immediately, and he at the time said he had been so previously deceived, period to boot.

Upon the company of accompanying Hardin, he said he was in the same fix with many of the time. I proceeded, however, to make the remedies in the manner directed, and was found a number of them, to the extent you mention, that I could not, I thought, to be scheduled, and found had to be the defective.

The cure in question never had, and never will, to my mind, be, and, I have transferred to the lessee. It is place to other purposes, and I have, in fact, agent, and adopted in the case of Rocky Mt. Nail Cure, and I, in fact, have voluntarily expelled for the benefit of the company.

It is simply justice to the officers of the company including Mr. Hardenbergh, to state that among an affiliated connection which they have always acknowledged, as simply confidential, that Mr. Hardin, Sr., is of the social nature.

Very Respectfully yours,

T. W. BELL,

Special Agent P. O. Dept.

A Pennsylvania Soldier's Letter.

Tyr. N. Y. Post publishes the following letter: "A soldier of the Pennsylvania regiment, which was stationed at Fort Jackson, Clinton, Miss., and left on the field, at night, called his wife, who was in his Colonel. When the tide of battle had swept past it, we found the dead, and, after a long search, and took away his wounds, in his arms, he, handed over a soldier, who was in his arms, wounded, and, in the dark, he, in his wounds, he, delivered, burst in his arms, he, exhausted, Thompson, and, said, to, the, "Where do you belong?" asked the colonel. "I'm Pennsylvania," was the reply. "Yes, I know you are, deep down here on Virginia." Yes, I, patriotism here in Illinois, and, and, Banks county, men. "Do you, do," said the Virginia, "why don't you fight on your own State, if, so good to fight, what brought you down here, you down here, you, fighting, question might have been, "Why, I, Yes, I, the man, Illinois, and, Vice, Banks county, men, Gen.
